SHARING MANAGEMENT WITH THE WORKERS

MARY VAN KLEECK

IS IT FINANCIALLY safe for a company to permit its wage-earning employees to vote on questions of shop management? Do the workers wish to have this share of responsibility? Lacking technical training and experience in the usual problems of business, has their judgment value to the business manager? If given power to decide policies, will they use it to increase their own wages and to decrease working hours regardless of the financial condition of the business? Will they have consideration for the interests of stockholders?

Considerable light is thrown on these important questions in a series of studies started by the Russell Sage Foundation in 1919, the first of which are now being published. These investigations covered the Partnership Plan of the Dutchess Bleachery at Wappingers Falls, New York, the Industrial Representation Plan of the Colorado Fuel and Iron Company in its coal mines and in its steel works, the Works Council of Rock Island Arsenal, which is owned and conducted by the federal government, and the employment policies of William Filene's Sons Company in their Boston store, besides brief surveys of a dozen other plans in a variety of industries.

This article will deal briefly with the first of these reports to be completed—the Partnership Plan of the Dutchess Bleachery, Inc., at Wappingers Falls, New York, undoubtedly one of America's most significant experiences in wage-earners' participation in management. The full report of the Dutchess Bleachery experiment, now in its sixth year, Ben M. Selekman of the Bureau of Industrial Studies, the Russell Sage Foundation.

The significance of the study is that as industry generally has been such unfavorable conditions, the Dutchess Bleachery that its plan indicates the possibility of not more, favorable industrial property through efficient efforts.

The Dutchess Bleachery mills of this kind in the country, employing about 600 workers—including a considerable
